

My 7th month in Canada

This month started with my first official Frisbee game. During last couple of months, our games have been rescheduled, because of weather conditions and other things, so I was so happy to finally play my first game after all the training. We played two games against another high school. It was a lot of fun, I understood all the rules and just forgot to call a foul, when there was one. Frisbee is a sport which is played without a referee, so when there is a foul or another breach of rules, you have to call it by yourself, then you explain what happened and decide together whether you replay it or not. My biggest success was that I was called best female player of my team at the end of the game.

Another big sport event this month was the provincial basketball tournament hosted at my high school. It is called “The Four As”. The whole school was excited, an opening ceremony was planned and noise makers to cheer up our team were sold. A week before our gym had been closed for the preparations. To introduce the whole team, a prep rally had been planned, where our team played against a team of teachers. The first game was played during school time and we ended up watching Basketball in every class either on Facebook’s livestream or going directly to the gym. The whole stage was packed with chairs and MPSH students. In blue and grey, which are our colours, we cheered on the Huskies, a lot of people brought pots to make more noise, it was crazy. The tournament took place over four days, we won every game, just in the finales we lost the last game, so we came in second.

Spring is coming! We were so lucky that the ski trip from school could take place, after it had been rescheduled once because of too much rain. We spent a day in the white hills ski resort, which is located right next to Clarendville. The day started quite early with a 2-hour drive during sunrise, it was a beautiful day. I went snowboarding for the first time and I had a lot of fun snowboarding with my friends from school. The ski resort is not as big as the one in Corner Brock and some slopes were closed because of not enough snow.

Right now, the easter break has just started. The last school break before I go back home. It really isn't that much time left and I start thinking about the last couple of things which are on my bucket list.
